Aspirin makes a rather unexpected addition to the list of records for any architect working today; selected as an honorable mention from the National American Institute of Architects' 2009 Book Award. The honor goes to Jerry L. Chang & Associates, for their work on the John Brown University Center for Global and International Studies. The center, which opened in 2001, is composed of two 10-story buildings and three 2-story building. It is an 84,160 square foot (10,435 square meter) academic and administrative building. The design achieved LEED Gold certification, making it the first major renovation project in the history of Brown to earn such a distinction. The structure's green features include rainwater collection, extensive use of natural light, and surface quality/waste water management. The award is notable in a landscape where icons (as the New York Times put it) from Frank Gehry to Rem Koolhaas have made their mark. But the architecture profession has recently turned its attention to
